

SOUTH CAROLINA CAN RAISE MULES

Unnecessary for State to Send Away Large Sums for This Product Annually.

BIG DRAIN ON RESOURCES

Money Now Spent For Mules Would Purchase Good Draft Mares From Which to Obtain Mules—Points on Care of Mares and Cattle—Home Raised Mules as Good as Any.

The tremendous outlay for mule power on the farm can be eliminated to a large extent in South Carolina.
Already a considerable number of farmers in the state are raising their mules at home and if this policy is adopted by all the state's farmers, the large annual drain on the state's resources for this product will be stopped.

Invested in brood mares, the amount usually spent for mules would purchase large, well-bred draft mares of the right type for producing mules.
The cost of raising mule colts on the farm to an age at which they can be put to work is about $90 each, when every item in the process is charged against him. This amount is large, but the fact is that most of it is charged against things that are not misused on the average farm, since the colts can be developed largely on pastures and products of the farm that would probably not be marketed in any other way.

Mares selected for mule raising should be of draft type, with quality, and should weigh about 1,400 pounds.
Though smaller mares are used with good results for producing mules of light weight, if mares are bred to cal in fall, when work on the farm is usually lighter and fall pastures are good, they need lose very little time during the year from their work in the field. Light work is beneficial to a brood mare even up to the time of calving, and the resultant colts are stronger and more thrifty because of it, provided the mare has been properly nourished with subsequent feed for a few weeks before foaling.

The average period of gestation, or time between service and foaling, is about 340 days or 11 months, although this varies somewhat in both directions. With this information, a farmer can have his mare foal at about the proper time.

The pregnant mare's grain ration should be proportioned to the amount of work she does. About three weeks before foaling, wheat bran should be added to her feed, the proportion of being gradually increased and grain proportions decreased as time approaches. Her food should be altogether free of moldy or starchy fodder or straw.

Essential point is to give the mare a large, roomy box stall.
Foaling mares should rest for two weeks before being put back to work.

The mare and her colts as much as possible, with the addition of bran and grain while the colts are young. Care and attention are essential to mature the colts to proper size. Grain should be given to it with its pasturage or clean hay.

Do not let a colt follow its mother on the road or in the field. Do not let a colt suck while the mare is overheated.
Always let the mare cool off first.
That mules can be raised profitably in South Carolina has been demonstrated by several farmers in the state, who save the expenditure usually made for mule power and claim for the home-raised mule many advantages over its imported competitor.

Write to Sidney S. Rittenberg, Clemson College, for an itemized statement of a comparison of mare and mule.

Information or help from these, farmers should address the expert or officer in whose ever. This will avoid delays sometimes costly. This is one of such matters as infant diseases and animal diseases which can spread so rapidly.

If hog cholera, farmers should communicate immediately with the county demonstration agent or the veterinary division of the college. Merely addressing will get a letter to its properly, but sometimes delays dangerous come about. It is a plan for a farmer to keep bulletins in station bulletins the bulletins will be found the station staff, which will be as a directory to any one who wishes to write to the college for information.

Summer of 1915 was the most successful for silo-building that South Carolina has ever had. There is much done in this line, however, it is hoped that this year's will be far exceeded next year.

DESTROY CORN STUBBLE

Farmers Can Reduce Damage from Corn Stalk Borer by Turning Under Stubble in Fall.

Corn stubble should not be allowed to stand in the field all winter undisturbed. The corn stalk borer is one of the "reasons" for this. This insect is one of the most notorious corn pests of the South and evidence of its work can be seen in practically any corn field at harvest time. It is the cause of the holes that may occur in any portion of a stalk.

The corn stalk borer remains as a larva, or worm, in the base of corn stubble beneath the ground during the winter. Farmers do this insect a great favor, therefore, when they let their corn stubble stand undisturbed in the field during fall and winter.

Destroying corn stubble is not very easy, except on modernly equipped farms where there is sufficient horse power and the stubble can be turned under thoroughly. There is, therefore, some temptation to leave it undisturbed. But the advantages of turning stubble are such that a farmer cannot well afford not to do it.
Turning it under helps very much in reducing the corn stalk borer for the next season.

Where thorough turning cannot be practiced, there are other methods such as "busting out" the stubble and hauling it to the compost heap for rotting. By another method, after the corn is gathered, stalks, stubble, and everything else may be "busted out," raked into heaps and, after a few weeks for drying, burned. In experimental work a very large percentage of corn stalk borer larvae (worms) was destroyed during winter where the stubble was plowed out and left exposed to the weather.

But when these methods are practiced by farmers only here and there, it will not help the situation very much. The control of the corn stalk borer depends upon the co-operative action of the farmers of a community.

The fact must also be borne in mind that it is an extravagant practice to let corn fields lie idle and exposed during the winter months, not only on account of these insect pests, but also on account of the loss from washing and leaching of soils.

WISHED SHE COULD DIE

And Be Free From Her Troubles,
but Finds Better Way.

Columbia, Tenn.—"Many a time," says Mrs. Jessie Sharp, of this place, I wished I would die and be relieved of my suffering from womanly troubles.
I could not get up, without pulling at something to help me, and stayed in bed most of the time. I could not do my housework.

The least amount of work tired me out. My head would swim, and I would tremble for an hour or more. Finally, I took Cardui, the woman's tonic, and I am not bothered with pains any more, and I don't have to go to bed. In fact, I am sound and well of all my troubles."

Cardui goes to all the weak spots and helps to make them strong. It acts with nature—not against her. It is for the tired, nervous, irritable women, who feel as if everything were wrong, and need something to quiet their nerves and strengthen the worn-out system.

If you are a woman, suffering from any of the numerous symptoms of womanly trouble, take Cardui. It will help you.
